Bombs target ISIL as police seek attacker

France launched "massive" airstrikes on Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant's (ISIL) de-facto capital in Syria Sunday night, destroying a jihadi training camp and a munitions dump in the city of Raqqa, where Iraqi intelligence officials say the attacks on Paris were planned.

Twelve aircraft including 10 fighter jets dropped a total of 20 bombs in the biggest air strikes since France extended its bombing campaign against the extremist group to Syria in September, a Defence Ministry statement said. The jets launched from sites in Jordan and the Persian Gulf, in co-ordination with U.S. forces.

Meanwhile, as police announced seven arrests and hunted for more members of the sleeper cell that carried out the Paris attacks that killed 129 people, French officials said several key suspects had been stopped and released by police after the attack.

The arrest warrant for Salah Abdeslam, a 26-year-old born in Brussels, calls him very dangerous and warns people not to intervene if they see him.

Yet police already had him in their grasp early Saturday, when they stopped a car carrying three men near the Belgian border. By then, hours had passed since authorities identified Abdeslam as the renter of a Volkswagen Polo that carried hostage takers to the Paris theatre where so many died.

Three French police officials and a top French security official confirmed that officers let Abdeslam go after checking his ID.

Tantalizing clues about the extent of the plot have emerged from Baghdad, where senior Iraqi officials said France and other countries had been warned on Thursday of an imminent attack.

An Iraqi intelligence dispatch warned that ISIL leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi had ordered his followers to immediately launch gun and bomb attacks and take hostages inside the countries of the coalition fighting them in Iraq and Syria.

The officials also said that a sleeper cell in France then met with the attackers after their training and helped them to execute the plan. There were 24 people involved in the operation, they said: 19 attackers and five others in charge of logistics and planning. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Duo was in France to film documentary

Luke Simcoe
Metro | Toronto

Kelsey Cole and Angelo Dodaro travelled to Paris to film a documentary about happiness. Instead, they found themselves documenting one of the worst terror attacks in the city's history.

Cole and Dodaro, both from Toronto, arrived in Paris Thursday to begin work on their Charting Happiness documentary. The film follows people who have triumphed over depression.

The pair had been scouting locations and doing some filming Friday night. They didn't realize the city was under attack until they ran into a police blockade.

"There were a ton of cops with huge guns," Cole said. "And then we saw the sirens go by. It was like 60 cop cars in a row followed by fire trucks and ambulances."

Cole and Dodaro got their camera equipment out and tried to interview some of the police officers.

Documentarians Kelsey Cole and Angelo Dodaro on the streets of Paris, only hours before a string of terrorist attacks shocked the city. CONTRIBUTED

"I told them we were working on a documentary called Charting Happiness," Cole said. "He turned to me and said, 'Well, you've just found the war on happiness.'"

The two tried to find another route to their hotel, but ended up lost in a city plunged into fear and darkness. At one point, they were near the Bataclan concert hall, where some of the worst violence occurred.

"Right after we left, there was another open-fire shooting there. We missed it by minutes," Cole said.

They eventually made it back to their hotel, thanks to a friendly Parisian who showed them the way.

Cole said they plan on staying in Paris to continue their work.

"This is an interesting twist and a challenge for us as content creators, and I guess you could say 'aspiring journalists' now, to tell a much broader story," she said.

On Saturday, Cole attended one of the vigils in the city, where she lit a candle and also laid down a maple leaf in solidarity with her Canadian Muslim friends.

"My soul was just rocked to the core," she said. "Until you smell the burning wax and hear the tears of people beside you who just lost someone, you can't imagine what it's like."

Police seek perpetrators of deliberate mosque fire

PETERBOROUGH

Flames caused over $80,000 in damage to religious hub

Police are investigating a fire deliberately set at Peterborough's only mosque.

Police and fire officials arrived on Saturday at around 11 p.m. to Masjid Al-Salaam at Parkhill Road west of Monaghan Road, after receiving a call of smoke coming out of the mosque.

Peterborough police have confirmed that the fire was deliberately set.

No one was found to be injured.

"If this is found to be a hate crime, it in no way represents the feelings of our community," said a statement released by Mayor Daryl Bennett.

"Attacking a place of worship is a despicable act. Masjid Al-Salaam, the name of the mosque, means Mosque of Peace."

"The faith communities are cornerstones of our city, contributing to charitable organizations and helping those who are less fortunate."

The interior of the building was heavily damaged and costs to repair are estimated to be at $80,000.

Community members of Peterborough are collecting donations to cover the costs of the damage.

"We encourage members of the community, of all or no faiths, to help the Muslim community restore their place of worship," stated a post by the Peterborough Mosque Community Support group.

Maryam Monsef, newly elected MP for Peterborough, released a statement condemning the actions of those responsible.

"I wish to take a moment to remind us all that Peterborough-Kawartha is a warm and generous community," said Monsef.

"We have a proud history as a welcoming and friendly place to live, just as it was when my family arrived here 20 years ago

"My thoughts are with the families that visit the mosque for prayer every week."

Peterborough Police Chief Murray Rodd echoed the statement.

"We condemn attacks on innocents and their place of worship," said Rodd.

Police are asking anyone with information to call city police or Crime Stoppers. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Refugee advocates worried

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

Advocates in Toronto are hoping the tragedy in Paris won't derail plans to bring more Syrian refugees to the city.

"Such incidents only add fuel to the fire for those who already have negative feelings about the entry of refugees," said Samir Mourani, a Syrian community activist and a committee member at Lifeline Syria.

A man reportedly was arrested in downtown Toronto Friday for uttering Islamophobic comments and a suspicious fire gutted a mosque in Peterborough over the weekend, causing damages estimated at $80,000.

Mourani stemmed the backlash stems from ignorance about the refugees' plight.

"These refugees are fleeing from the same people the world is fighting, which is ISIS," he said. Mourani said he was reassured to hear the Liberal government is still committed to bringing 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada before the end of the year.

"Canadians are open and welcoming, and it's terrific to have that feeling in our community," said Mariam Hamaoui, president of the Refugee Aid group.

"Many Canadians understand and they know that Syrian refugees are just trying to have a peaceful life like everyone else."

While Canada's commitment to resettle Syrian refugees could continue despite the attacks, it may not bring enough solace to those still trapped in refugee camps across the Middle East, said Annette Wilde, who's been leading fundraising efforts at Save a Family from Syria.

"They are living day-to-day on the hope and promise of coming to Canada," she said.

WAGE GAP

Government aims to bridge divide

Jessica Smith Cross
Metro | Toronto

The Ontario government wants to close the wage gap between men and women in the province.

According to the Ministry of Labour, men in Ontario still earn between 12 and 31 per cent more than their female co-workers, depending on the type of work.

The ministry has been hosting town hall meetings across the province asking people to share their views about equal pay for equal work.

Consultation meeting are taking place in Toronto Monday, from 3:30 to 5 p.m. and 6 to 7:30 p.m. at the Marriott Downtown Eaton Centre Hotel (525 Bay St.).

Participants will be asked about their experiences with education, discrimination, mentorship, parental leave, salary negotiations and more.

Gun amnesty targets ordinary citizens

Lois and Robert Atkins are a lovely couple in their 80s who adore their grandkids, go bowling twice a week, and — until recently — were packing heat.

For the past 60 years the couple has had a gigantic vintage rifle tucked away in their basement crawlspace.

Robert's father was a farmer, and Robert thinks he may have used the weapon to go hunting.

Whenever Lois remembered it was in her basement, "it gave me the willies," she said. So this week, the couple dug it out from its hiding spot and called Toronto police.

"It's going to be nice to have it out of the house," she said.

The Atkins' gun is one of more than 50 picked up by Toronto police in their ongoing gun amnesty, which began earlier this month and continues until Monday. The initiative, put on by the force every few years, gives Torontonians the opportunity to safely dispose of unwanted guns. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

It's that time of year ... the annual Santa Claus parade rolled through the streets Sunday, officially marking the start of Christmas in the city.

Yuletide events are underway, starting with the Toronto Christmas Market at the Distillery District starting Nov. 20. Revellers can enjoy unique shopping experiences alongside traditional music dance performances and food.

Skating at Nathan Phillips Square kicks off Nov. 22 (weather permitting). The square will host the annual tree-lighting ceremony Nov. 28, with performances by the Nathaniel Dett Chorale, DJ Serious and Zero Gravity Circus.

Dundas Square will be a holiday hub starting Dec. 12, as the Toronto Christmas Festival begins, including live music, food and photo ops with Santa Claus.

Save Scarborough RT, expert argues

Consultant says still less costly option

Richard Soberman says it's time for sober second thought before shutting down SRT. MARCUS OLENIUK/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

It's the obvious option and the least discussed. But the idea of refurbishing the failing Scarborough RT — instead of building a replacement subway or LRT — is about to get another airing.

A Transportation Summit organized by the Toronto Region Board of Trade on Monday will present a paper by one senior transportation consultant, University of Toronto professor emeritus Richard Soberman.

He argues buying new SRT vehicles would be cheaper and faster than the replacing the failing SRT with an extension of the Bloor-Danforth subway northeast from Kennedy Station.

The idea is not without its problems. The newer version of the SRT cars being used in Vancouver may not be compatible with the existing Scarborough route. Continuing the SRT to Sheppard, where it could connect to the future Sheppard LRT would require a separated right-of-way.

But Soberman says these issues could be overcome for less than the $4 billion he estimates as the cost of a subway extension the city has lately considered.

The Residential and Civil Construction Alliance of Ontario (RCCAO) is bringing Soberman's paper to the business event even though it doesn't normally comment on individual projects. Executive director Andy Manahan said he's making an exception because the subway is such "an egregious error."

"The mayor (John Tory) has publicly stated he doesn't think it's appropriate to flip-flop on these things. But when you're talking about a few billion dollars, it's worth a sober second look," said Manahan.

Soberman is clear that the SRT technology — an orphan in the TTC subway and streetcar system — was never the right fit. It was foisted on the city in the 1980s by the province.

Ontario is investing $15.5 billion in projects ranging from GO regional express rail to the Hurontario LRT in Mississauga. Toronto is looking at committing about $8 billion in Mayor John Tory's SmartTrack rail plan.

ISIL

Debate restarts over ending airstrikes

Deadly terrorist attacks in Paris have prompted renewed debate about the Liberal government's intention to withdraw from airstrikes against the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL), but some experts say there is little reason to rethink the plan.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau made a campaign promise to pull Canada's warplanes from Syria and Iraq and instead focus on training local fighters. He reiterated it in a phone call with U.S. President Barack Obama a day after he was elected.

And on Saturday, after ISIL claimed responsibility for attacks in France that killed at least 129 people, a senior official in Trudeau's office confirmed he hadn't changed his mind.

That's the right call, said Andrew Mack, a security expert and fellow at the One Earth Future Foundation.

"The attack on Paris makes no difference whatsoever to the rationale for not bombing. I actually think bombing is effective, but Canada's contribution to it is minimal," he said.

Mack said ISIL was losing in Syria, pointing to its loss of a town between Mosul and Al-Raqqah and the likelihood it would lose another soon. These defeats are likely to affect its ability to attract disaffected youth, he said. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Nations should still welcome refugees, despite attacks

The French ambassador to Canada has vowed the horrific events in Paris would not affect his country's policy towards the Syrian refugee crisis.

Even though a Syrian passport was found among the remains of one of the suicide bombers that struck the French capital's soccer stadium.

The lead, which has yet to be verified, casts a shadow over efforts by both France, and now the Trudeau government, to give safe haven to some of the tens of thousands of refugees and migrants who've flooded across Europe since the spring.

"Let's not be mistaken. France has always been a land of asylum, like Canada," Nicolas Chapuis said. "The people who are seeking refuge are not the barbarians. They are fleeing the barbarians."

The refugees are victims of the cruelty of the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL), who are only asking to live in freedom and peace, Chapuis said.

"Certainly there will be individuals who are going to try to take opportunity to mix with the refugees in order to spread chaos, but let there be no mistake: This should not stop us from opening our arms and helping those who are seeking our help. It is part of our humanity."

The eloquent remarks could have the effect of stiffening the Trudeau government, which faces renewed concern and questions about the planned resettlement of 25,000 Syrian refugees before the end of the year — one of its signature campaign initiatives.

Quebec Premier Philippe Couillard also urged Canadians to remain open to the arrival of refugees despite heightened security fears in the wake of the Paris attacks.

> It's a question of civilization rising against the barbarians.
> Nicolas Chapuis, French ambassador to Canada

Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale did the TV news show circuit on the weekend, attempting to reassure the public that the newly-elected government would take nothing for granted as it puts individuals through different layers of screening, both in refugee camps and after they arrive in Canada.

Chapuis says consultations will take place in western capitals over the next few days on how the world can rise up collectively against ISIL.

Trudeau low-key on security

Paris

World leaders step up calls for unity against ISIL

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau takes part in a moment of silence to honour the victims of Friday's attacks in Paris, at the start of a plenary session at the G20 Summit in Antalya, Turkey, on Sunday. SEAN KILPATRICK/THE CANADIAN PRESS

World leaders, led by U.S. President Barack Obama, are stepping up their calls for a united fight against Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) extremists, portraying Friday's deadly attack in Paris as an assault against all their countries.

Obama branded the terrorist incident as an "attack on the civilized world."

The U.S. later confirmed it would work with France to step up its airstrikes against extremists.

Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau kept a low profile on the issue at the G20 Summit in Antalya, Turkey, on Sunday.

He used his first foray on the world stage to talk up infrastructure investments and youth as the keys to economic success in a morning address to a business crowd, and later spoke strongly on the issues of climate change during a session with other leaders.

Trudeau spoke on the topic of security only when prompted by a reporter during a Sunday morning meeting with Mexican President Enrique Peña Nieto.

"Obviously the safety and security of Canadians is a priority for me and my government. I've been speaking with our minister of public safety, been speaking with the various police and security agencies to ensure that Canadians are kept safe," Trudeau said.

> This cannot be just another summit.
> Donald Tusk, president of the European Council

"It's a topic we are engaging with here with the other leaders as well to ensure continued safety for our citizens," he added.

With the tough talk in Antalya Sunday came a plea. A top European Union official implored leaders not to give in to "basic" reactions and close their doors to refugees fleeing violence in the aftermath of the attacks.

"We should not mix the different categories of people coming to Europe," Jean-Claude Juncker, the president of the European Commission, told a news conference as the summit got set to begin.

"The one responsible for the attacks in Paris ... is a criminal and not a refugee and not an asylum seeker," Juncker said.

G20 SUMMIT

PM pushes youth, diversity

Justin Trudeau used his international debut Sunday to tell a top-tier G20 business audience that long-term investments in infrastructure and youth are the keys to growth, not a preoccupation with short-term profits.

And as the prime minister reaffirmed Canada's commitment to accept 25,000 Syrian asylum seekers, he delivered a pointed message that Canada is a country that defines itself by its shared values, not its cultural differences, and he urged others to do the same.

That was as close as Trudeau came to discussing the more contentious issue that followed him to the G20: when he plans to withdraw the Canadian fighter jets that are part of the American-led coalition bombing Islamic militants in Syria.

Trudeau had a "brief informal encounter" with U.S. President Barack Obama on the sidelines of G20 Sunday but the issue of ending the CF-18's air combat mission did not come up, the prime minister's office said.

> The success of our young people will determine the success ... of our planet.
> Prime Minister Justin Trudeau

Trudeau faces renewed pressure to reconsider the withdrawal since the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) claimed responsibility for Friday's attacks in Paris that left more than 120 dead in what French President Francois Hollande has called an "act of war."

But even before he opened his mouth, Trudeau received a welcome on the floor of the G20's business and labour panel discussion that lived up to the clichéd rock-star-welcome descriptor.

He was mobbed for selfies by dozens of smiling delegates at the meeting shortly after his arrival. Trudeau willingly posed for several minutes, allowing many selfies and group photos at the foot of a stage, prior to giving a speech and taking part in a panel discussion before an amphitheatre of more than 100 invitees.

Trudeau covered ground that would have been familiar to Canadians following the federal election, including his infrastructure spending plans to stimulate growth.

Lebanon detains nine suspects in connection to Beirut attacks

Lebanon has detained seven Syrians and two Lebanese suspected of involvement in planning terrorist attacks, including a twin bombing last week, and smuggling extremists into the country.

Interior Minister Nohad Machnouk announced the arrests Sunday, three days after a twin suicide attack in a southern Beirut suburb killed 43 people and wounded more than 200.

Machnouk says the attackers were planning to strike the Rasoul al-Aazm hospital, which is run by the militant Hezbollah group, but changed their minds because of tight security. He says they instead targeted a busy street near the hospital during rush hour on Thursday evening. The attack was claimed by the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kurdish forces uncover two mass graves in town formerly ruled by ISIL

Kurdish forces said Sunday they uncovered two mass graves outside Sinjar, a northern Iraqi town near the Syrian border that was ruled by the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) group for more than a year before the extremists were driven out last week. The first grave uncovered was west of the town's centre near the technical institute and contained 78 elderly women's bodies, the Sinjar director of intelligence, Qasim Samir, told The Associated Press. The second grave was uncovered about 15 kilometres west of Sinjar and contained between 50 and 60 bodies of men, women and children, he said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Survivors speak of 'hell' during Bataclan massacre

Paris

Famous music venue became scene of utter chaos, horror

There was a moment — just a moment — when the concert hall was eerily quiet. The rock band had stopped playing, and people had dived to the floor after realizing the sudden explosions hadn't been part of the show. Everything was silent.

Then the attackers started again, strafing the crowd with automatic gunfire. There were screams of terror, the staccato of Kalashnikovs and cries of the wounded, followed by a standoff with police and the explosions of suicide bombs.

By the time the ordeal was over at one of Paris' celebrated entertainment venues, 89 people were dead and many more were wounded, entangled bodies in pools of blood.

A French survivor summed it up with one word: "Hell."

It was a sell-out crowd at the Bataclan on Friday for the 9 p.m. concert by an American group, the Eagles of Death Metal. Less than an hour after the band began its set, a series of bangs rang out. Many thought it was firecrackers or pyrotechnics.

"Everyone thought it was part of the show, but then I saw the lead singer's face drop before he ran off stage, and the lights came on," university student Hanna Corbett, 21, told the Nottingham Post newspaper of Britain.

"We all just dropped to the floor. When the music stopped, there was this haunting silence in between gunfire and I could see blood on the floor."

As the Eagles of Death Metal performed, at about 9:40 p.m., a black Volkswagen Polo drew up and parked outside the Bataclan, French officials said.

The gunmen in the concert hall were "very calm, very methodical, very slow," John Leader, 46, told Australia Broadcasting Corp. after escaping with his 12-year-old son. Two of the men worked together, one aiming and shooting while the other covered him.

> They were obviously trying to stay quiet so that they didn't attract more gunfire.
> French survivor Michael O'Connor, on the wounded refraining from crying out while being held captive

"They weren't in there shooting like in an American movie," Leader said. "It was finding a target and then shooting, and then finding the next target and then shooting."

Corbett said she and Jack Konda, 21, another student from Nottingham University, escaped by crawling over "a pile of people" — they weren't certain whether they were dead or alive — near the fire exit.

Michael O'Connor, another Briton who was attending the concert with his girlfriend, spoke to the BBC of utter chaos with "people falling all over the place, people screaming, people just clawing and running and pushing to get away."

CASUALTIES

Identities, details of more victims emerge in Paris

A Chilean mother and her daughter, cut down in a concert hall while the daughter's five-year-old son survived. A young Italian woman, separated from her boyfriend and friends when the concert erupted in chaos. They were among the latest victims named as officials on Sunday continued the heavy task of identifying the 129 people killed in Friday night's co-ordinated terrorist attacks in Paris. Among the confirmed dead:

— Nick Alexander, 36, of Colchester, England, who was working at the Bataclan concert hall selling merchandise for the performing band, Eagles of Death Metal.

— Thomas Ayad, 32, producer manager for Mercury Music Group and a music buff who was killed at the Bataclan.

— Asta Diakite, cousin of French midfielder Lassana Diarra, who played against Germany in Friday's soccer match at Stade de France, during which three suicide bombers blew themselves up outside the stadium Friday night.

— Patricia San Martin Nunez, 61, a Chilean exile, and her daughter, Elsa Veronique Delplace San Martin, 35. They were attending the concert at the Bataclan with Elsa's five-year-old son, who Chilean officials say survived.

— Valeria Solesin, 28, an Italian-born doctoral student at the Sorbonne. She had lived in Paris for several years and had gone to the concert at the Bataclan with her boyfriend. They lost track of each other as they tried to escape.

Paris attacks signal global move by ISIL

Paris

Group may be using recent bombings to attract recruits

As the deadly attacks in Paris made horrifically clear, the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) group is determined to establish itself as the dominant jihadist movement capable of operating far beyond the limits of its self-declared "caliphate."

Doing so achieves numerous aims for the group, not least of which could be winning it clout to attract even more recruits. Others may include sharpening divisions between Muslims and non-Muslims in Europe — and forcing the West into a difficult choice of either backing off or being drawn into what ISIL would see as a holy war in Syria and Iraq.

A woman lights a candle at a makeshift memorial in tribute to the victims of Paris' attacks on Nov. 15 at the place de la Republique in Paris, France. JOEL SAGET/AFP/GETTY IMAGES

Coming soon after ISIL claimed the downing of the Russian plane in Egypt and deadly suicide bombings in Lebanon and Turkey, the Paris attacks appear to signal a fundamental shift in strategy toward a more global approach that experts suggest is likely to intensify.

"The message is that this is an open war, not restricted to the conflict zone in Iraq and Syria," said Bilal Saab, a resident senior fellow for Middle East Security at Brent Scowcroft Center on International Security.

Until now, the militant Sunni group had mostly focused on its internal rivals — Bashar Assad's regime and rival Muslim Shiites, which the group considers to be heretics.

ISIL claimed that Friday night's attacks, during which scores of innocent victims were methodically gunned down in the heart of Paris, was a response to France's role in U.S.-led airstrikes against ISIL in both Iraq and Syria.

BALKAN CORRIDOR

Passport highlights lax security measures

The focus on a Syrian passport found near the Paris attacks highlights an uncomfortable reality: European authorities are completing few checks on the hundreds of thousands of people moving across their territory fleeing war and poverty.

The passport found near the body of a suicide bomber was registered in October in Greece, Serbia and Croatia, three of the countries on the corridor that crosses the Balkans and is known for lax controls and ease in obtaining transit documents. The owner was allowed to proceed because he passed what is essentially the only test in place — he had no international arrest warrant against him, police in the states said Sunday.

It was not clear whether the passport was real or fake, or whether it belonged to the suicide bomber. But trafficking in fake Syrian passports has increased as hundreds of thousands of people try to get refugee status, the chief of the European Union border agency Frontex has said. Most of those who enter countries on the so-called Balkan corridor for migrants — Greece, Macedonia, Serbia and Croatia — are registered with authorities. Their data are checked against Interpol records, and their fingerprints and photos are taken. But, many people tell officials that they've lost their identity papers, and they can give false names and other information, including their country of origin.

Healthy lifestyle

The link between sugar consumption and increased body fat has long been known. Too much sugar in the diet promotes more insulin, the fat storing hormone, and thus more body fat.

THE SLIMMING EFFECT OF STABLE BLOOD SUGAR LEVELS

Recently an Italian study of a sugar-blocking supplement showed impressive weight loss results.[1] The supplement, called Zuccarin™, produced on average 20 pounds of weight loss, in only 90 days.

The subjects lost 10% of their body weight and lost 3 times the weight of the control group, who were on a controlled diet, but without a mulberry supplement. In addition, the subjects also experienced healthier blood sugar levels after using this mulberry supplement.

The explanation for the weight loss is that Zuccarin uses natural mulberry leaf extract and chromium to block absorption of sugars in the foods we eat. When these sugars are undigested, our blood sugar stabilizes, and weight loss occurs.

ZUCCARIN MAX™
CHANGED MY LIFE

"I have taken this supplement for 2 years now and can't imagine being without it. I have seen my blood sugar levels stabilize and I have even lost 25 pounds of weight since starting. I have recommended it to a lot of my friends and they are now experiencing the same good results as I have."

G20

Dozens held by officers as nation plays host to summit

Police in the Turkish Mediterranean city of Antalya detained dozens of people Sunday during a series of protests denouncing a G-20 summit that is underway in a nearby seaside resort, although the demonstrations were mostly peaceful.

Security is tight during the two-day meeting, expected to be dominated by discussions about how the G20 nations will respond to the deadly Paris attacks that have been claimed by the Islamic State group.

Demonstrators were being kept away from the venue at a secluded seaside resort some 40 kilometres (25 miles) from Antalya city.

A group of some 500 youths belonging to a Turkish nationalist association gathered in the city, holding up cardboard effigies of U.S. President Barack Obama and denouncing U.S. interventions in the Middle East. Police allowed the group to march briefly only after they agreed to leave the effigies behind.

Hundreds of members of Turkish left-wing groups and trade unions later held another protest denouncing the organization which gathers the world's wealthiest economies.

They marched in central Antalya carrying a banner that read in Turkish and in English: "Killer, colonialist, imperialist war organization G-20 get out!"

Police detained dozens of demonstrators after one of the demonstrators threw fireworks at them while the crowd was dispersing.

Earlier, police detained four protesters who wanted to walk to the venue of the G-20 summit to deliver a letter to participants.

Police also detained a group of about 20 protesters who refused to undergo a security check, the state-run Anadolu Agency reported. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bahraini court gives life sentences to 12 Shiites

A defence lawyer in the Gulf Arab country of Bahrain says a court has ordered 12 Shiites to life in prison and stripped them of their citizenship on charges of forming a terrorist group and targeting police with explosive devices.

Lawyer Isa Ebrahim told The Associated Press the court issued its verdict Sunday for incidents that took place in 2013 and 2014.

Last week, a Bahraini court ordered five people stripped of their citizenship after being convicted on terrorism charges and spying for Shiite powerhouse Iran. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROMANIA

Country's cabinet full of youth, women

Romania's prime minister-designate on Sunday named his Cabinet of mostly young professionals with management experience, after the former government collapsed following mass protests over a nightclub fire where at least 55 died.

Dacian Ciolos named his ministers, all of whom will need to be approved by Parliament later this week. Seven of the 22 posts are to be held by women.

The nomination of Ciolos, who named a government of technocrats, is a direct criticism of Romania's politicians who are perceived as being corrupt, arrogant and removed from the problems of ordinary people. Parliamentary elections are scheduled for late 2016. Parties indicated Sunday they will approve the government.

Former Prime Minister Victor Ponta, who was already on trial for corruption charges related to his work as a lawyer from 2007 to 2008, and his Cabinet resigned on Nov. 4 after tens of thousands protested over the nightclub fire. Protesters say the tragedy happened because of lax fire regulations and corruption. Thousands continued to protest for several evenings, demanding better governance and an end to corruption. the big question

Why do we pay more attention to Paris than Beirut?

"It's not Paris we should pray for. It is the world ... in which Beirut, reeling from bombings, is not covered in the press," says a meme responding to the viral hashtag #PrayForParis and Facebook profile pictures featuring the French flag. It's true the global reaction to suicide bombings that killed dozens in Lebanon's capital on Thursday was slower and less severe, says Simon Fraser University communication studies professor Richard Smith: "There is a Western (European and North American) bias in Western media." But that's not the only explanation. Thousands of Canadians visit Paris every year, and the attacks felt like they could have happened here, Smith adds. Bombings are sadly common in the Middle East, but unusual in Europe. Finally, the fallout from the French attacks, like military action against ISIL, could affect Canadians directly. Still, social media may be getting us concerned about issues we don't directly relate to, like violence in Lebanon and the Syrian refugee crisis — and that's a good thing, Smith says. Beirut's tragedy may have even attracted more eyeballs because it coincided with the one in Paris. If not for the outrage at the media ("People are really sad and upset, and if they can project that on something else ... they will," Smith says), many people would not have known or cared about Beirut at all.

The cost of policing in this city is just absurd

TORY'S TORONTO

Matt Elliott

With the Toronto Police Service receiving the green light last week for yet another budget increase — they're set to receive an extra $27 million, pending council approval — it's time once again to point out that the cost of policing in this city is totally out of control.

The numbers are absurd.

Toronto needs leaders who will acknowledge the possibility that the city can get by with fewer police officers.

According to City of Toronto figures, the average Toronto household paid $658.57 towards the police this year. That's the highest single line item on the property tax bill by a country mile.

It's 64 per cent more than the amount going to the TTC. It's six times more than the amount going to employment and social services.

It's a giant pile of money, in other words. But even more alarming is the speed in which that pile has been growing.

I recently put together a nerdy spreadsheet, comparing the City of Toronto's budget from the year 2000 with the budget passed earlier this year. I looked only at what the city terms the "net budget" — the stuff funded by property taxes.

Here's what I found: In Toronto's recent history, only two city services have put real upward pressure on your property taxes.

One is the TTC, which is still dealing with the long-term impact of withdrawn provincial operating funding.

The other is the police.

Remove those two huge costs from the equation and the city's net budget has increased by just 22 per cent since 2000. The police budget has gone up by 78 per cent in that time.

Over the last few years, we have started to see more politicians talk about pushing back against this runaway growth. "We can't continue to see significant increases in the police budget indefinitely," Mayor John Tory told reporters after the police board meeting.

But the trouble with talk is that it's cheap. Every attempt so far to wrangle the police budget has followed the same script. Politicians talk about the need to find efficiencies. The police counter with the fact that about 90 per cent of their budget is labour costs, so real savings will mean cutting the number of officers.

It's a game of chicken. And so far the politicians have been the ones to blink.

It's a tired pattern. More than ever before, Toronto now needs leaders who will acknowledge the possibility that the city can get by with fewer police officers — and who will admit that some of the money going to policing would be better spent if it went to other services.

Change is possible. We got word recently that the city has a consultant report detailing potential savings to the police budget. Conveniently, the report wasn't publicized before this year's budget was passed by the police services board.

Next year there won't be any excuses.

Resist the temptation of simple explanations for the attacks in France

It's okay that you're alive. It's okay that you had brunch on Saturday, or had wine with friends last night, or made a Christmas shopping list.

It's also okay not to have a simple response to Friday night's horrific attack in Paris.

It was gruesome, unimaginable, even to Parisians "staggering and groggy, still trying to believe what happened," to quote the Canadian writer and Paris resident Nancy Huston. It felt inevitable, for the terrorism that routinely slaughters Muslims to again hit Westerners.

There are already plenty of pat answers swirling, the same that have arisen after similar attacks. They feel predictable, even scripted. They risk oversimplicity, when the questions are far too important.

Take those calling for Canada to increase our bombing campaign in Syria, not end it as the Liberals have promised. A militaristic response feeds revenge, but doesn't have the best track record in the Middle East. If the Liberals truly believe long-term solutions are found elsewhere, we have been shown again how much we need them.

Consider, too, the calls to slow our intake of Syrian refugees, lest some be terrorists — a wholly unnecessary move, say some immigration experts, that ignores the screenings already planed.

Take Francois Hollande's claim that only now, with the spilling of Parisian blood, has the war begun, while ISIL called the attack retaliation against France for bombing Syria, where the war has been raging for five years. (France launched significant airstrikes at ISIS over the weekend.)

Beware also the need to underline the way Muslim groups are dutifully condemning the attack — despite the fact that ISIL is a vicious offshoot of Islam, and in no way synonymous with a religion of 1.6 billion people. Too much emphasis on such remarks reeks of Islamophobia.

Painting your Facebook profile photo red, white and blue may seem an obvious move. But some will note that the more routine terrorist attacks outside the West don't get the same social media play, and others will argue that the root causes of violent extremism in the Middle East were not birthed in isolation.

On Sunday morning, CBC host Michael Enright asked Nancy Houston if, in the spirit of slogans coined after 9/11 and the Charlie Hebdo attack, we are all Parisians?

"I don't know who your 'we' is, Michael, I'm afraid," she responded. Her point: There is no global "we."

That doesn't mean we — Canadians — shouldn't attend memorials, or condemn the violence, or push for public debate about what to do after this last wave of terrorism. I only mean to say we should tread carefully.

Six steps to building a financial plan

If you're like most people, you probably know you should have a financial plan, even if you haven't actually developed one yet.

Don't worry, says Lee Bennett, Senior Vice President, TD Wealth Financial Planning, it's never too late – or too early — to start. "A financial plan isn't just to help you save for retirement," says Bennett. "Whether it's paying off a student loan, buying a car or a home, starting a family, or even travelling, everyone, at every stage of life, has goals that a financial plan can help them achieve."

Bennett offers the following tips on how to help you get from where you are today to where you want to be in the future:

1. Think about your goals and objectives
Knowing where you want to go is the foundation of a sound financial plan and will help you decide which route to take.

2. Gather the data
A financial planner can help you assess where you are now and what financial resources you already have.

3. Do the analysis
This step will help you identify the right solutions for your particular journey. A financial planner can assist you in reviewing your specific situation and help you choose from the many options that are available.

4. Develop a strategy
This is your action plan of what you need to do to achieve your financial goals. Working with a financial planner can help ensure that your plan is realistic and achievable.

5. Put it into practice
A financial plan is only helpful if you put its recommendations into action.

6. Follow up and review
Just as your life changes over time — a new job, a family, a home — your financial goals can change, too, so it's important to meet with your financial planner and regularly review your plan to make sure it stays relevant to your particular needs.

Knowing how to start can sometimes be the biggest challenge. A financial planner is a great source of knowledge and can help you get on track to achieving your goals of today and tomorrow.

JOHANNA SCHNELLER WHAT I'M WATCHING

Don't give up on True Detective yet

TV DRAMA

If you stick with it, the series' second season pays off

TRUE DETECTIVE: SEASON 2, EPISODE 4 (HBO CANADA)

Three of the four main characters — cops in various stages of burnout played by Rachel McAdams, Colin Farrell and Taylor Kitsch — get into a shootout with some very determined drug dealers.

For 10 minutes, the action escalates: A sniper picks off cops, cops return fire, a meth lab explodes, a bus crashes, innocent bystanders die. A brilliant tracking shot follows McAdams as she runs through a factory, gun brandished. (The director is Jeremy Podeswa, the Canadian filmmaker.)

Although the show is in love with its moodiness, the action ramps up in Episode 4 of True Detective's second season. HANDOUT

Not only is it taut, it's plausible, and you always know where you are in time and space — which, in our era of hyper-quick cuts, is rare. Plus, character is revealed: who's reckless, who cowers.

Then, when the last bad guy goes down — this is the part I love best — the show pauses to let our heroes double over, panting and swearing, and absorb the carnage. For a full minute. I'd never seen that done quite so well, where a show stands still and lets you soak something in.

I realize that everyone has decided to hate Season 2. I see what people complain about — it's a slow unfolding, a bit too in love with its moodiness. But I don't find it that different from Season 1.

I recall wading through a lot of Matthew McConaughey gobbledygook (enjoyable, but often nonsensical) before the payoffs came in. And the payoff in this episode is a jaw-dropper. Because it's the series midpoint, it made me re-evaluate everything that came before. It earned my respect.

Johanna Schneller is a media connoisseur who zeroes in on pop-culture moments. She appears Monday through Thursday.

Selena Gomez selling mansion

Apparently Calabasas — the arid suburb 45 minutes north of Los Angeles — is falling out of favour with the pop stars of the world.

The area first rose to prominence when Britney Spears and Jessica Simpson moved into mega-mansions there, but you probably recognize it from Justin Bieber's egg-throwing days.

Bieber doesn't live there anymore, and pretty soon neither will ex-girlfriend Selena Gomez, who is ditching her 7,700-square-foot, six-bedroom, seven-bath mansion, according to E! News. And it can be yours if you're ready to pony up $4.5 million. I wonder if the prices have gone up because of all the celebrities moving out. NED EHRBAR/METRO HOLLYWOOD

A most Swift court ruling

There are few things I love more than people who know how to have a little fun with their day jobs, and the judge who had to humour Jessie Braham's lawsuit against Taylor Swift over claims she ripped Shake it Off from him is a shining example. She dismissed the case in style, quoting several Swift hits in the process: "At present, the Court is not saying that Braham can never, ever, ever get his case back in court. But, for now, we have got problems, and the Court is not sure Braham can solve them. As currently drafted, the Complaint has a blank space — one that requires Braham to do more than write his name. And, upon consideration of the Court's explanation ... Braham may discover that mere pleading Band-Aids will not fix the bullet holes in his case. At least for the moment, Defendants have shaken off this lawsuit." NED EHRBAR/METRO HOLLYWOOD

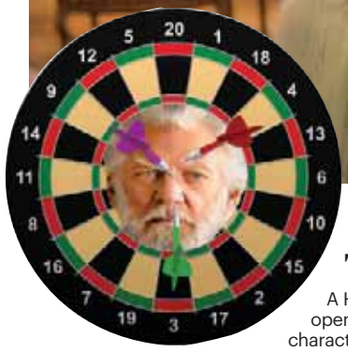
The Games will go on

Mockingjay Part 2 opens this week — now that the franchise has reached its final act, Hunger Games fans will be searching for ways to get their Panem fix. Director Francis Lawrence has said he isn't opposed to spinoffs, and tributes will surely find creative ways to keep immersed in Katniss's world. We imagine five ways the Games will go on.



TRIBUTES

The Bar

A Harry Potter-themed bar called The Lockhart recently opened in Toronto, featuring "potions & elixirs" that allude to characters and a decor that pulls from inscriptions in the book. In our ideal Hunger Games-themed bar, the references would be much more overt. It would, of course, be called Tributes. Local city bylaws prevent weaponry from being in such close proximity to alcohol, so instead of a crossbow range on the patio we would settle on a dartboard where the bull's-eye would be President Snow's face.

The house drink — "Haymitch's pick" — is the Tracker Jacker, where the key poison is fennel-infused absinthium wormwood. Everything on this menu, called Grill on Fire, is flambé: squirrel, venison, turkey. Each order comes with a complimentary basket of bread from Mellark's, the bakery down the street, made by the baker's hot, ashy-blond-haired son. MELITA KUBURAS/METRO

PANEMONIUM

The Band

Consider The Flux Capacitors, a SoCal ensemble that bills itself as "the only official Back to the Future-themed '80s band." The group performs '80s hits decked out as Marty, Doc, Biff and the like, and even brings a DeLorean replica to shows.

So what would a Hunger Games tribute band be named? Panemoninum is an obvious choice if we're going in a punk direction, but we also like The Jabberjays for a hip-hop crew, or Peeta Burnt the Bread for the shoegazing crowd. Katniss as the frontwoman is a given. We also see Johanna shredding it on her axe/guitar and Finnick wielding a trident-shaped bass.

There's no shortage of songs about stickin' it to the man to choose from: Fight the Power, Killing in the Name (natch), The Times They Are A-Changin'. Any encore would have to include a haunting rendition of The Hanging Tree, followed by the anti-establishment anthem Tubthumping. Those Panem rebels, they get knocked down, but they get up again.

EVA LAM/METRO

BUTTERCUP CAFÉ

The Theme Park

As if following the adventures of Katniss Everdeen didn't come with enough ups and downs, fans will soon be able to take a real-life roller-coaster ride inspired by her train trip to the Capitol, and a simulated hovercraft tour of the Panem nation. Hunger Games theme park projects are planned in Dubai, China and the U.S. A recreation of District 12 complete with costumed characters is in the works for the complex in Dubai, but here's what Metro would add to the mix:

- A midway-style Whac-a-Mutt game.
- A cat café in honour of Buttercup, the cat Katniss loves to hate.
- Katniss vs. Everybody tees.
- Effie Trinket's fabulous fake eyelashes as souvenirs.

HENRIETTA WALMARK/METRO

CRESSIDA AND POLLUX

The Storyline

With the vague possibility that the series could be extended, Metro proposes three options (spoiler alert for discussion of plot points in Mockingjay Part 2):

Prequel: A President Snow origin story
There's so much we don't know about the origins of the man who rules Panem. How did Coriolanus Snow become its ruthless leader? What motivates his cruelty? What's with the poison and why white roses to mask his bloody breath?

Sequel: The rebuilding of Panem
A new president is in place following an emergency election. How will he or she direct the nation and districts? A political drama full of backstabbing and skullduggery a la House of Cards could be a nice change from the constant battle scenes of the first four films.

TV Series — Behind the scenes with Cressida and Pollux
The rebellion's resident filmmakers have moved on from war coverage to documenting the rebuilding efforts of Panem. They travel from district to district collecting and sharing the stories of the people of Panem.

LIZ BROWN/METRO

STANDARD ISSUE WEAR

The Style

In 2013, luxury e-retailer Net-A-Porter teamed up with Trish Summerville, costume designer for Hunger Games Catching Fire, on a capsule collection based on the film. The Capitol Couture line featured adaptations of designs that appeared in the movie including a laser-cut leather dress for $995 US inspired by Katniss Everdeen's chariot outfit. But aspiring to dress like the ruling class is rather crass. If you're with the revolution, your clothing should transcend rank.

Metro proposes a District 13 diffusion line of unisex standard issue wear that doesn't oppress its maker or its wearer. Locally made using sustainable fabrics and production methods, these classic designs would be the base of any egalitarian's wardrobe. Wearing a daily uniform doesn't have to be stifling, as many creatives and innovators have discovered (see: Sofia Coppola, Karl Lagerfeld, Steve Jobs). It frees up mental energy for other pursuits.

NICHOLE JANKOWSKI/METRO

ART APES LIFE

How Jennifer Lawrence is Katniss Everdeen

She came from humble beginnings, the spotlight thrust upon her despite her obvious discomfort, and she went on to inspire a nation. Are we talking about Katniss Everdeen, Jennifer Lawrence's Hunger Games character, or Lawrence herself? How about both?

The parallels are eerie if you look closely enough. Lawrence first came to the public's attention in the critically acclaimed Sundance darling Winter's Bone, which saw her scrounging around Appalachia, hunting and skinning squirrels and risking life and limb to provide for her younger siblings. It was basically the first act of the first Hunger Games movie, minus all the totalitarianism.

We thrilled with each new, elaborate red carpet gown; marvelled at every acting triumph. We agonized over each death-defying pratfall before the cameras — until we realized her natural clumsiness was her greatest weapon. This girl really was on fire.

She even found herself in a real, honest-to-Panem love triangle, her heart torn between lanky, British X-Men: First Class co-star Nicholas Hoult (shown left) and her first true love — working in awesome movies. Try as she might to make it work with Hoult, her thoughts were clearly elsewhere. If there wasn't an X-Men movie actually in active production, she couldn't make things work with Hoult. They'll always have Montreal, though.

As her work brought her more and more into contact with the Capitol — or, you know, Hollywood — she courted more danger, more scrutiny, more creepy older men — like Chris Martin (shown right) — pawing at her. But through it all she kept her chin up, secure in her folksy dignity.

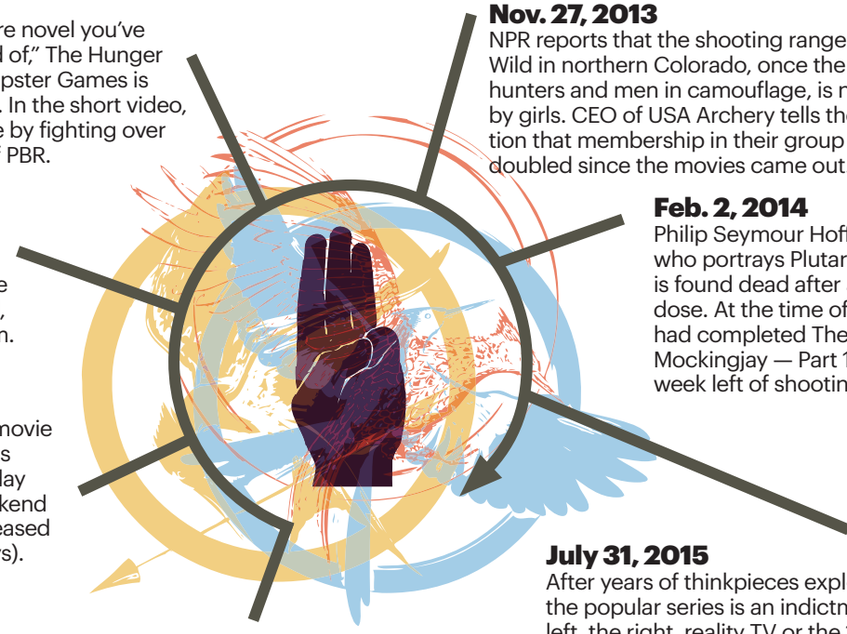
TIMELINE THE HUNGER GAMES ENTERS POP CULTURE

April 2012
"Based on the obscure novel you've probably never heard of," The Hunger Games parody the Hipster Games is released on YouTube. In the short video, participants compete by fighting over rare vinyl and cans of PBR.

March 30, 2012
Original release date for The Hunger Games in Vietnam, but it was deemed too violent by the Vietnamese National Film Board, which ultimately banned the film.

March 23, 2012
The Hunger Games, the first movie in the series, is released. It sets records for biggest opening day and the biggest opening weekend (for a non-sequel film, not released during the summer or holidays).



Feb. 28, 2012
Before the movie is even officially released, Tumblr blog Hunger Games Tweets is created to draw attention to racist tweets by people complaining about characters like Rue and Thresh being portrayed by black actors. This despite the fact that series creator Suzanne Collins specifically described the characters of having dark skin.

Nov. 27, 2013
NPR reports that the shooting range at Archery in the Wild in northern Colorado, once the playground of hunters and men in camouflage, is now dominated by girls. CEO of USA Archery tells the news organization that membership in their group has more than doubled since the movies came out.

Feb. 2, 2014
Philip Seymour Hoffman, the actor who portrays Plutarch Heavensbee, is found dead after a heroin overdose. At the time of his death, he had completed The Hunger Games: Mockingjay — Part 1, and had a week left of shooting for Part 2.

July 31, 2015
After years of thinkpieces exploring whether the popular series is an indictment of the left, the right, reality TV or the 1 per cent, a celebration of the individual, the collective or feminism, The Politics of the Hunger Games by author Jamey Heit is released. The debate, however, rages on.

EMINA GAMULIN/METRO

Gale vs. Peeta

It's the ultimate debate for Hunger Games fans. Who should Katniss choose?

LIZ BROWN/METRO

Gale Hawthorne

Pros:
- Gale and Katniss have plenty in common: hunting, the great outdoors, and knowing what it's like to almost starve to death.
- If Panem were a bit more peaceful he'd be the football star, the prom king. He's the hot guy you want to show off to your friends.
- He's solid and stoic — he hunts for his family and comforts Prim as Katniss takes her place in the reaping.

Cons:
- He's a 'the-ends-justify-the-means' kind of guy, which isn't the best thing if you're prone to empathy.
- Much like Katniss, he's full of anger and vengeance — and two firecrackers is nothing but trouble in a relationship.

Peeta Mellark

Pros:
- He's the baker's son — plenty of carbs any time you like — as Katniss learns, that's a good thing when you're almost starving to death.
- He's kind and generous, risking his life to protect the people he loves.
- He's an artist and in times of peace his esthetic would come in handy for decorating a nice home in District 12.

Cons:
- Short and non-athletic — he's dead weight when it comes to hunting and death battles.
- The brainwashing and attempts to kill Katniss are romance killers.

CONCLUSION
Neither guy is worthy of a woman like Katniss. She should strike out on her own.

Tech entrepreneur shares secrets to startup success

Creating a successful startup requires a lot: a great idea and an innovative product, of course, but also an insane work ethic, a willingness to take risks and the ability to think on your feet. But all those assets won't account for much if you don't have traction.

"Traction is evidence of customer demand, and if you don't have it your company dies," explains Gabriel Weinberg, an entrepreneur and co-author of Traction: How Any Startup Can Achieve Explosive Customer Growth. "You need to have customers who are deeply engaged with the product."

Weinberg has launched two technology companies: Opobox, which he sold for $10 million in 2006, and current project DuckDuckGo a non-tracking search engine that has increased traffic 600 percent since the NSA revelations broke. And he says most self-starters — himself included — don't think about traction early enough, if at all.

"Startups should be spending half their time getting traction," he says. "If you spend less than that, it's really not top of mind and you won't come up with creative solutions — and you need creative marketing solutions for a startup to work."

So how do you grow your audience, get people to clamor for your product and launch a successful business? We asked Weinberg for his tips.

When testing your marketing strategy, Gabriel Weinberg suggests you consider how many customers your plan will attract, and the cost of getting one customer. HANDOUT

Don't wait till you have a perfect product to share it

"What generally happens is people have a good idea for a startup, and they kind of sit in their bunker, producing (the perfect) product," says Weinberg. In reality, you aren't going to know what needs fixing until you get fresh eyes on the product. "And the only way to do that is to start trying to get traction right from the beginning."

Create a "traction" goal

Weinberg says startups need to determine some kind of "traction goal," which is usually one of three things: how much traction you need to raise money from investors, how much traction you need to be profitable or make a certain amount of money, or how much traction you need to prove to yourself and your team that this is something you want to work on for a while.

"And that should be a hard number you can identify," he adds. "Ten thousand customers, or a hundred customers, depending on your business."

Test, test, test

So how exactly does one get to this number? Every business is different, so while search-engine optimization (making your website show up for key search results) might work for one startup, another company might do better focusing on viral marketing (getting your customers to refer others) or going to trade shows or speaking engagements. "Most people have no idea how to reach the market. So you have to test different channels to find the bullseye — that one channel that's going to get you to grow," he says.

'Keeping up' is a senseless concern

The Kardashians may look like they have it all, but we don't know what goes on when the cameras aren't rolling. ARTUR HARUTYUNYAN/AP PHOTO, PAN PHOTO

PERSONAL FINANCE

Peer pressure can push some to spend cash irresponsibly

Gail Vaz-Oxlade
For Metro Canada

I am astounded at the progress we have not made when it comes to living our lives authentically.

Oh we talk about it. And read about it. And talk about it some more. But the reality is that we're worse than ever.

We've gone from keeping up with the Joneses (the guys next door) to Keeping Up With The Kardashians, which is a much more expensive proposition.

And we've allowed house porn to juice us into buying more than we can afford so we can have what "they" have.

We like to think of peer pressure as something our teenagers experience and must learn to manage. The phenomenon is called "imaginary audience." Those poor sods are convinced the world is judging them and they spend inordinate amounts of time primping and preening.

They so need to fit in, so they'll bend over backwards to the pressure, perceived or real, that they feel.

I'm sure you know more than a few people — no, I'm not talking about teenagers — who are obsessed with impressing others to the point that they'll blow the equivalent of a week's income on a pair of shoes, which turn out to be damn uncomfortable to wear.

Or they're so determined to be "that guy," they'll offer to pay for everyone's meal only to then have to carry a balance or hit up Mommy and Daddy for rent money.

Or they line up for hours (or days) to buy that new piece of technology because buying it three weeks later when you can just waltz into the store is just so not cool.

SOCIAL MEDIA

Facebook and Instagram can make other people's lives the envy of your own. Remember this: Facebook Happy is an illusion.

Social media seems to add to the problem. If everyone you know is Facebook Happy you might wonder why your life seems so ho-hum. Maybe you need to take in a concert or three, hop on down to The Big Apple for a weekend or renovate so you have something to brag about.

Never mind that posting fabulous pictures to show that you, too, have a great life means you'll forgo saving anything for the future. Hey, the future is a long way off, right?

"Keeping up" has moved from keeping stride with those people with whom we directly interact to keeping abreast of a world of people we hardly ever see or may not even know personally. If you think other people are doing way better than you are, and wonder why you can't have what they seem to enjoy, know that Facebook Happy is an illusion.

While you may be able to see the results of conspicuous consumption, what you can't see is the debt-rot in the background of those glamorous selfies.

Learning how to balance your money and your life is an important part of growing up. Recognizing that there are things more important than "how things look" is a major step in shifting from the superficial to the substantial.

How you choose to use your money is about choice and about understanding that there's more to your life than meets the eye.

Bernier gifts Zuccarello late goal as NYC go nine straight

Mats Zuccarello scored with 58.3 seconds left to give the New York Rangers their ninth straight win, 4-3 over the Toronto Maple Leafs on Sunday night.

Zuccarello also had two assists as league-best New York improved to 14-2-2, the best 18-game start in franchise history in wins and points (30).

The Rangers' winning streak is their third-longest overall and longest since winning 10 straight in the 1972-73 season.

Ryan McDonagh, Derek Stepan and Derick Brassard also scored for New York, and Antti Raanta made 23 saves.

Peter Holland, Joffrey Lupul and Dion Phaneuf scored for Toronto, which snapped a three-game winning streak. Jonathan Bernier stopped 26 shots.

Bernier was shaky throughout the game, surrendering rebounds. That was costly on Zuccarello's game-winner.

McDonagh fired a shot from the left point that Bernier couldn't control and Zuccarello poked the puck into the net to decide a wild, back-and-forth contest.

Holland opened the scoring with 2:03 left in the first period with a backhander from in close. The goal was his third of the season, and his second in four games.

The lead lasted all of 2:47 of game time as McDonagh tied it 44 seconds into the second period with his third of the year off of a cross-ice feed from Zuccarello.

New York took a 2-1 lead with 6:05 left in the second as Bernier misplayed Stepan's shot from centre-ice, and the puck rolled under the Toronto goaltender's pads.

It was the second goal from centre-ice Bernier allowed in less than a year, as Arizona's Oliver Ekman-Larsson had a similar score on Jan. 30.

Lupul's goal with 2:22 left in the period tied it again.

Brassard scored 3:37 into the third to put the Rangers ahead 3-2.

The goal, his sixth of the season, came off a pass from Zuccarello from behind the net. Phaneuf tied it again 1:38 later with his second of the season.

Prior to the game, there was a moment of silence for the victims of Friday's terrorist attacks in Paris, followed by the singing of the French, Canadian and American national anthems. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

IN BRIEF

Djokovic continues his roll at ATP finals

Novak Djokovic stretched his winning streak to 15 straight at the ATP finals by beating Kei Nishikori 6-1, 6-1 Sunday.

The top-ranked Serb has not lost at the season-ending tournament at the O2 Arena since 2011. He has won three straight titles since then.

Djokovic lost only nine points on his serve and never faced a break point. With Nishikori serving, Djokovic won 30 of the 53 points played. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Celtics look Smart as they silence Thunder

Marcus Smart scored a career-high 26 points to help the Boston Celtics beat the Oklahoma City Thunder 100-85 on Sunday.

Isaiah Thomas scored 20 points, Avery Bradley had 14 and Jared Sullinger added eight points and 15 rebounds for the Celtics.

Smart also guarded Russell Westbrook effectively. Westbrook still scored 27 points and carried a larger load with Kevin Durant out injured. Serge Ibaka scored 16 points, and the Thunder had a season-low point total and their worst shooting performance. Oklahoma City's three-game win streak was also snapped. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SOCCER

Fans given security, safety reassurances for Euro 2016 in France

Nervous fans planning to attend next year's European soccer championship in 10 cities across France got a guarantee Sunday from the president of the organizing committee that security will come above everything.

"I've said it several times before: security is the biggest thing at stake for Euro 2016," Jacques Lambert said in an interview with sports daily L'Equipe, published in the aftermath of Friday night's attacks in Paris that killed nearly 130 people and left hundreds more wounded.

"I'm shocked by the cost of lives, which is terrifying," Euro 2016 committee president Lambert said. "But unfortunately I'm not completely surprised."

The Euro 2016 logo at the Allianz Riviera stadium in Nice, southeast France. AFP/GETTY IMAGES

There is speculation that the tournament — France's biggest sporting event since the 1998 World Cup — could even be cancelled for safety reasons. While acknowledging that "anything is possible," Lambert was adamant that this should not happen. "Anything is possible, anything is conceivable," Lambert said. "But it would be to admit that for those who attacked us, it was worth it."

Euro 2016, uniting 24 teams, should be the pinnacle of soccer featuring the very best of Europe's talent, but a guessing game is now underway as to just how safe it will be with Lambert conceding "no one can pretend to be able to stop actions like this 100 per cent."

Even if each stadium is secured, there's concern over fan zones in each of the 10 cities where supporters will gather to watch games on big screens. Millions will use these zones during the tournament's 51 matches, potentially offering 51 opportunities for terror to strike again.

The series of attacks began Friday night to the sound of explosions outside Stade de France, where France was playing Germany, and where it won the 1998 World Cup final against Brazil in a joyous atmosphere so far removed from the darkness now overpowering the City of Light. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NFL

It took all game, but Patriots stay perfect

There's an air of invincibility and inevitability about the New England Patriots.

Invincibility because since January, they haven't lost. Inevitability because of the feeling they will find a way — something they did in their toughest test this season, edging the New York Giants 27-26 on Stephen Gostkowski's 54-yard field goal with one second remaining.

"You're one kick away from being Public Enemy No. 1," Gostkowski said. "You're always one kick away from trending on Twitter as the No. 1 loser in America.

"But it's fun being on a good team. It's kind of like being on a baseball team where everybody's got a hit, and you can't wait to get up there and get a hit, too."

The Giants, who seemed to have New England's number, were poised to knock off the Patriots (9-0) on Josh Brown's fourth field goal with 1:47 remaining. But you don't beat the Patriots with field goals.

After Brown made his franchise-record 27th straight, from 29 yards, Tom Brady drove the Patriots 44 yards, converting a fourth-and-10 on the series. He also got lucky when Giants rookie safety Landon Collins dropped an interception; Collins said he hit his head on the turf and lost the ball.

SUNDAY in New Jersey

PATRIOTS	GIANTS
27	26

Gostkowski, the NFL's leading scorer the last three seasons, sent his winning kick soaring through the uprights.

New York (5-5) has given the Patriots fits under Tom Coughlin, including two Super Bowl wins, and nearly pulled off another victory.

A five-yard pass to Odell Beckham Jr. on New York's final drive was originally called a touchdown, then reversed by video review.

That possession was set up when Trumaine McBride intercepted Brady at the goal line, setting up an 86-yard, 15-play march to Brown's field goal.

That left room for Brady, who hit Danny Amendola three times for 32 yards on the winning series.

The Carolina Panthers also remained undefeated at 9-0 with a 27-10 victory over the Tennessee Titans.

The Cincinnati Bengals, 8-0, will put their undefeated mark on the line Monday night against the Houston Texans.

Gushue rebounds from injury to win National

Two weeks after his frightening fall, Brad Gushue has rebounded to win the National. The skip from St. John's, N.L., beat Winnipeg's Reid Carruthers 7-2 in Sunday's final of the Grand Slam of Curling event.

Gushue was back on ice this week for this first time since suffering a head injury from a fall last month. The 2006 Olympic champion needed seven stitches to close a gash above his right eye after he fell Oct. 31 at The Masters in Truro, N.S. He lost his balance and landed head-first on the ice.

In women's play, Ottawa's Rachel Homan edged Tracy Fleury of Sudbury 5-4 to win her second straight Grand Slam of Curling tournament after claiming the Masters two weeks ago.

Tiger-Cats advance to play Ottawa in division final

Justin Medlock gave the Hamilton Tiger-Cats another shot at the Ottawa Redblacks.

Medlock's 46-yard field goal on the final play earned Hamilton an exciting 25-22 East Division semifinal win over the Toronto Argonauts before a sun-drenched Tim Hortons Field sellout of 24,029. The Tiger-Cats head to Ottawa next weekend in the conference final after suffering two late-season losses to the Redblacks.

EAST SEMIFINAL

TIGER-CATS	ARGONAUTS

Medlock was more than comfortable having Hamilton's season resting on his shoulders.

"(On Sunday night) I was thinking I wanted the game to come down to me," he said. "As soon as we got past centre field I was like, 'Let's kick.'

"I knew (the kick was good) as soon as I hit it."

The winning boot wasn't nearly as difficult as the one Medlock envisioned.

"They're always a little longer in my head," he said with a smile. "I'm thinking I'm going to set a career high."

Medlock nearly rewrote the CFL record book in the first half. His 55-yard field goal to open the scoring was one yard short of the CFL playoff record.

Medlock's heroics came after Toronto's Swayze Waters hit a 42-yard field goal with 49 seconds left to make it 22-22. However, Waters missed from 39 and 40 yards earlier in the quarter.

Medlock's kick with a 23 kilometre-an-hour wind at his back capped a smart 40-yard drive engineered by Hamilton quarterback Jeremiah Masoli, starting his first CFL playoff game. The march was helped by a roughing-the-passer penalty against Toronto's Martin Wright, who appeared to be blocked into Masoli.

"You guys know I saw," Toronto head coach Scott Milanovich said. "I'm not going to get fined."

Still, Milanovich felt good having the game come down to Waters, the CFL's 2014 top special-teams player who battled injuries this year.

"Swayze has been a money player for us ever since he's been here," Milanovich said. "Any time I can send him out there I feel good about it. The wind was tough; he just pulled it." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Stampeders dominant in downing Lions

The Calgary Stampeders advanced to the CFL's West Division final with a 35-9 win over the B.C. Lions in Sunday's semifinal.

The Stampeders travel north to Edmonton to meet the Eskimos next Sunday with the winner booking a berth in this year's Grey Cup. They will appear in their seventh division final in eight seasons under head coach and general manager John Hufnagel.

Stampeder quarterback Bo Levi Mitchell improved to a career 3-0 in CFL playoff starts. The division nominee for the league's Most Outstanding Player award completed 15 of 24 pass attempts for 199 yards and a pair of touchdown throws to Eric Rogers.

Calgary running back Jerome Messam rushed for a touchdown and defensive back Keon Raymond ran an interception in for a major.

Anthony Parker caught a two-point convert throw for the hosts and Rene Paredes kicked a field goal in front of an announced 26,306 at McMahon Stadium.

STAMPS-ESKS

The provincial rivals tied for the best record in the CFL this season at 14-4, but Edmonton won their season series and thus the playoff bye.

The Lions replied with a trio of Richie Leon field goals and did not score an offensive touchdown against Calgary this season.

Travis Lulay relieved starting quarterback Jonathon Jennings just before halftime when Jennings suffered a shoulder injury. It was Lulay's first game action since spraining his knee Sept. 3 in Montreal. Lulay was 10-for-19 in passing for 119 yards.

UFC

Holm knocks out Rousey

Ronda Rousey was the UFC's unstoppable force until Holly Holm used the former champion's aggression against her to produce one of the sport's biggest upsets.

Rousey chased Holm around the ring at UFC 193 on Sunday — looking for the right hold and taking head shots along the way — until Holm saw an opening 59 seconds into the second round and snapped a kick to the head that immediately dropped her more fancied opponent to the canvas.

Holm (10-0) jumped on the prone Rousey, delivering several blows to her head before the referee intervened, ending Rousey's 12-fight unbeaten run and handing Holm the bantamweight title.

"There's been a lot of blood, sweat and tears but it was all worth it," Holm said.

RECIPE Mushroom Cheddar Chowder

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

Let's get the week started with something easy. This creamy bowl of earthy goodness will be on the table in under half an hour.

Ready in
Prep time: 20 minutes
Serves 4

Ingredients
- 1/4 cup unsalted butter
- 1 large shallot, diced
- 3 cloves garlic, diced
- 1 carrot, diced
- 1 lb mushrooms, sliced (we like to use a mix of cremini and portabello)
- 2 cups vegetable stock
- 3 tablespoons spelt flour
- 1 cup milk
- 1 teaspoon salt
- Pinch of pepper
- 1/2 cup grated cheddar cheese for garnish
- 2 tablespoons sour cream or Greek yogurt

Directions
1. In a large pot over medium heat, melt half the butter. Add shallot, garlic and carrot and sauté until crisp-tender. Pour in half the stock and then add the mushrooms, reduce heat and allow to simmer for 15 minutes.
2. In a small saucepan, melt the rest of the butter. Gradually add flour, whisking constantly until smooth. Add milk and bring mixture to a boil, then immediately reduce heat and continue whisking until mixture thickens a bit, about 2 to 3 minutes. Add to soup.
3. Stir in the remaining stock. Season with salt and pepper. Remove pot from heat and, using an immersion blender, blend soup until desired consistency.
4. Ladle into bowls and serve with a helping of grated cheddar, dollop of sour cream or Greek yogurt.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
The more others agree with each other the more you will disagree. Are you being perverse for the fun of it or have you subconsciously noticed something that suggests they have got it wrong? Trust your instincts.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
There may seem to be no reason for what happens but there is a purpose. Your task is to discover what it is and make the changes work for you.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Just because something has always been done a certain way does not mean that it must be done that way. Just because something is trendy or fashionable does not mean it is right. Go your own way.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
If you want a job done well today do it yourself. Don't listen to what the so-called experts tell you because their advice is likely to be misleading. You have enough knowledge and enough know-how to do it yourself.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
You will stir up some trouble today by saying things that others just cannot agree with, but that's okay. You are right to call it as you see it but watch your back.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Anyone who thinks you will back down from a challenging situation does not know you well. You are prepared to battle it out. While you may not win the fight you will win respect.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Something will happen that disrupts your routine but there is no point getting upset. Go with the flow and believe that fate knows what is right. Everything will work out.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Sometimes the best way to help others is to leave well alone. Chances are you won't be thinking straight over the next few days, so keep your distance as much as you can.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You believe that all things are possible, that you can overcome any challenge, and you may be right. However, Saturn in your sign warns there are powers at work that even you cannot control, so be careful.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You won't be able to rely on others for advice or assistance over the next two or three days, so you will just have to delve into your reserves of courage and handle whatever life throws at you in your own way.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
No matter how impatient you may be to get started on a new project you are advised to wait. Neptune's influence could make you rather careless over the next few days.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Someone will go out of their way to provoke you today and you will find it hard not to react. Don't fall into their trap. They are hoping for an excuse to punish you.
